For honor centurion combo guide

9 Keep Your Enemies Close The Centurion's one primary disadvantage is that it is by no means a ranged character. This ability allows you to finish any series of chain attacks with an unblockable attack enemies won't often see coming, especially if you've got them locked down with the Centurion's kicks. This makes Imperial Might a situational combo that should be used after the opponent is reeling from a kick or running low on stamina. You might get away with spamming it against beginners, but advanced players will wreck you so wait for the right moment. Related Topics About The Author Ben Baker (547 Articles Published) More From Ben Baker Whenever you manage to successfully guard break your opponent, you can use your light attack to initiate a quick bash that will knock them back and drain their stamina, which can be followed up with an Imperial Might combo. In addition to managing your own stamina in battle, half of the Centurion's strategy is managing the stamina of his opponents. 2 Once You Start, Don't Stop The Centurion is not designed for long drawn out fights or trading blows by any means. The Centurion shines when he can keep the opponent pinned down and at his mercy. Armed with a standard-issue gladius, which requires you to get up close and personal to remain effective, this new hero is a beautiful addition to For Honor's current roster of playable characters that is a blast to use in combat. 7 Throw A Knee Whenever You Can Similar to the kick, the Centurion can also throw a quick knee attack that can continue a barrage of attacks and keep the opponent stumbling. This isn't to say it's a flawed class to play by any means, just that it requires a little more brawling than say a Nobushi fighting from further back with a spear. After you have an enemy low on stamina by using kicks, jabs, and throws, always follow up with an Imperial Might combo if the opportunity presents itself. To be effective as a Centurion learn to fight up close and keep the opponent within that gladius's short reach. In addition to the rampant cliff side Sparta memes being reenacted, players are finding this brutal character can be very deadly in the right hands but is sometimes difficult to use to its full potential. Join the community. The gladius is the character's primary weapon and is one of the shortest weapons in the game. Wait a moment and try again. If the player can knock an opponent down with a well-timed kick this gives an opportunity to perform a deadly execution move with a brutal jumping attack. 8 Kick Opponents To Their Death An appreciated movie reference by the For Honor community, the Centurion has a signature move called the Knockback Kick. Next: New Netflix Documentary Uses For Honor To Show The Pains Of Game Development Good Lord Pokemon Legends: Arcus Is Hostile Pokemon Legends: Arcus presents a very different world than the one we're used to seeing in Pokemon games. One, the Centurion, is a close-quarters powerhouse inspired by none other than the legendary warriors who served as the backbone of the Roman army. Get Amino The first DLC for For Honor, a thrilling combat game that plays fast and loose with historical, came out on Tuesday, and Shadow and Might introduced two new playable heroes. Admittedly the knee is a little more situational than the kick, but the player would be a fool to not capitalize on a guaranteed heavy attack after a successful parry, so throw that knee around. Unlike the Lawbringer however, this hero isn't designed to offensively overwhelm your opponent. 10 He's Very Technical The main thing to keep in mind when fighting as the Centurion is he is a very technical fighter. In general if you see an opportunity to get a kick in, always take it. These combos do massive amounts of damage to an enemy's health and stamina, and can easily turn the tide if you're a little starved for health. Like 13 Into For Honor? It takes a lot of practice, but it could be argued that once you've mastered playing the Centurion, you've mastered the game. This character has a lot of tools at their disposal to keep the enemy staggered or knocked down so use them and take advantage of them, never play it safe when the enemy is helpless. Due to the gladius being one of For Honor's shortest weapons, you won't have many opportunities to deal damage from a distance, unless you manage to successfully land the Centurion's overhead charge attack, which can easily be blocked or dodged by a skilled opponent. Lock Your Opponent Down The Centurion is best when locking down opponents like the Lawbringer, which means you'll want to consistently take advantage of your hero-specific Knockback Kick to drain the stamina of your enemies. When Imperial Might is used the Centurion unleashes a barrage of attacks that finishes up with an unblockable attack. Just remember not to be too aggressive, since good players will be able to retaliate if you aren't carefully maintaining your own defenses. Utilize Guaranteed Hits Even though the Centurion is a hero who relies heavily on abusing an enemy's mistakes against them, he also has a surprising number of moves you can use while defending yourself as well. The Centurion requires players to be able to read opponents well and perform moves with precision timing. 6 Unleash Your Imperial Might The Centurion has a devastating zone attack that works surprisingly well in one on one battles if used correctly. It might feel like your slap fighting at times, but those little hits can mean a lot in the overall fight and are too simple to perform to pass up. Half of the Centurion's strategy is biding time until they see an opponent fall and then pouncing on them like a puma. Hopefully some of these tips will give players a better understanding of how they should be using this mighty warrior and better employing him on the field of battle. Your hits may not be landing much damage at first, but once your opponent is knocked down you'll be free to deal a barrage of attacks and punish them brutally. 13 Jab=heavy+squareThrowback=light+squareParry counter=parry+square(immediately)Kick + heavy + jabCharged heavy + charged jab + Eagles talons.Light + light + heavy + square+LightHeavy + faint + jump heavy (good finisher)+Jab + lightKick + light + throwParry counter + kick + heavy/charged heavy + charged jab + Eagles talonsParry+parry counter+kick+heavyx2+charged jab+Eagles talonsHeavy+jab+heavy+jab+heavy+jab+heavy+jab etc...Ps: these are only base line combos, using these moves you can make your own combos to take your enemies down! :satisfied: Also whenever it says jab you have the options to either charge it up all the way and use Eagles talons when they fall, or just do a normal jab. Also take advantage of your parry combo, allowing you to follow a successful parry with a free heavy attack or unblockable charged attack. There are few feelings as glorious or satisfying in this game as leaping onto an opponent for a brutal stab attack as the Centurion, except maybe a kick off the cliffside. For Honor has introduced the brutal Centurion class with the Shadow And Might DLC and it's shaking up things on the battlefield. The minute you see an opening and begin an attack, stay close and behave aggressively. He is not a simple-minded brawler with heavy attacks or a fast spammer of any kind. Something went wrong. He is a tough class to utilize effectively, but for those who learn his ways, this technical fighter is brutal. 5 Get Those Free Hits As you may have noticed already the Centurion has some quick attacks and follow-ups that while they may not do a lot of damage, can open up future attacks and are good for chipping away at an opponent's health pool. Some would argue he tends to turtle in gameplay, but this is largely from misuse and trying to fight with him in a simplistic manner. 4 Stamina Vampire The Centurion is something of a stamina vampire in that the majority of his attacks revolve around draining an opponent's stamina. Instead, you'll want to focus on countering each of their attacks while simultaneously retaliating with your own. The Centurion feeds off enemy mistakes and heavily punishes them with a brutal series of mix-up attacks, locking them down with combos designed to bypass defenses. In For Honor, the Centurion is an in-your-face powerhouse, capable of locking down opponents and barraging them with attacks which will drain their stamina. But, like every other hero in the game, you'll have to work to master his moves to truly become a legend yourself. Here are a few tips to help you get started: Remain Close When playing the Centurion, you'll always want to be very, very close your opponent, regardless of how offensively they play. Often these are used by players to send their foes hurtling off cliffs with iconic battle cries, but it can also be used to stun an opponent and drain some of their stamina. 1 Capitalize On Mistakes Summarizing the points made above the Centurion is designed to be a tactical fighter who reads his opponent's movements and capitalizes on any mistakes they make. If the player manages to parry an opponent's attack and follows it up with a well-placed knee this opens the opponent up for a brutal heavy attack that will always land. Well placed knees follow a parry to guarantee a heavy attack, throwing a kick to send an enemy flying or stagger them, unleash an Imperial Might combo when they're vulnerable, and jump as soon as the enemy's back hits the ground is key to dominating as the Centurion. This fighter is an opportunist and should be treated as such at all times. What's great about the Centurion is that whenever you knock an opponent down, you'll be able to perform a jumping attack with your gladius for a massive amount of damage as well. Use Imperial Might One of the Centurion's most powerful hero-specific abilities is a brutal attack chain called Imperial Might. Be sure to follow it up with an additional kick to stun your opponent, too, which then gives you an opportunity to use a charged strike that can lead into a deadly combo. 3 When The Enemy Falls, Pounce Expanding upon the idea that the Centurion is a stamina vampire the Centurion possesses a leaping attack that can deal devastating amounts of damage if not outright killing the opponent. The downside with Imperial Might is that it's very easy to reverse if the opponent knows what they're doing. Ensure your enemy has no way to retaliate by keeping the pressure on when you start an attack and don't finish unless they manage to weasel their way out or they lie lifeless on the ground. Learn to milk these free hits for everything their worth by using them after every parry and throw those jabs whenever you can. Remember, the Centurion is a technical fighter not a brawler so go after the opponent's stamina bar in the beginning, the health bar will come later. To get anywhere with the Centurion, players need to get up close and personal so their short swords have a chance of striking the opponent.
